THE GREAT WHEAT BELT.

Wheat is grown over a wide range of latitude and under many and varying climatic conditions. In some respects it is the hardest of small grains and in others the most delicate. In the earlier stages of its growth it will stand almost any vicissitude of climate, but as it nears maturity it becomes exceedingly sensitive to climatic disturbances. For about three weeks, while passing from the bloom to the mature grain it is especially sensitive to the slightest touch of frost, which is the great drawback of wheat growing in northern latitudes. A difference of one or two degrees in temperature on a single night during this period will make the difference between success and failure of a wheat crop, and mean thousands or perhaps millions of dollars loss to the region affected. Where the line between success and failure is so narrow it becomes possible to pass over it. The experience of half a century in all parts of North America has demonstrated that the general cultivation of the soil of any region tends towards the maintenance of an equal temperature, and therefore that many regions in which wheat did not mature successfully while the country was in a raw condition, become the most successful wheat producers when cultivation has become general. It is a fact that the regions of North America, which are to-day recognized as the great sources of the wheat supply of the continent and of the civilized world are far beyond what were supposed to be the climatic limits of wheat production fifty years ago.

The production of wheat is limited rather by conditions of soil than by lines of latitude. The most remarkable feature of the spread of the growth of wheat on the continent of America is the continual shifting of the centre of the wheat growing area and its continual progress in a northwesterly direction. The eastern states and provinces which were the great wheat producers of half a century ago now buy most of the wheat they need for their own bread, from states and territories which then were considered to be far beyond the climatic possibility of wheat. The cause of this remarkable change of the centre of production is the exhaustive character of the wheat crop. The soil which the wheat plant may be varied to meet very different conditions of climate, but there is no substantial variation in the demand which this the richest and most concentrated of vegetable foods makes upon the soil—demands which only the most enduring of soils can respond to for many successive seasons. The soil of the forest and prairie lands of the northernmost and of the eastern provinces of Canada was ideal for wheat production for a few years, but only for a few years. (The top soil was rich but thin, and the sub-soil was poor. A few crops of wheat exhausted the native fertility of the thin layer of rich mould, and when that was gone and the ground had to be fed for each crop, wheat raising became unprofitable. Wheat was replaced by less exhaustive crops in the older, settled country, and the wheat area pushed first further west and then further north where the native fertility yet remained in the soil. This process was continuous. The world's need of wheat carried civilization westward along the Great Lakes, still westward and northward into the basin of the Mississippi, and still westward and northward into the valley of the Red River of the north. Forests were cleared and prairies brought under cultivation; roads were constructed, cities were built; vast industries established and civilization spread over the face of the earth, all because the world needed wheat. And although the wheat area moved always forward it still left smiling fields and happy homes behind, dependent on other resources than wheat, under conditions which made these resources of equal value with, but always because of, the wheat.

Wheat is the crop of the pioneer. It converts the natural fertility of the soil into cash in larger proportion and more quickly than any other means. The risks of course are great, but so are the chances of profit; and it is the chance of sudden wealth, or at least competence, which draws men on to do and dare as nothing else will. Once the native fertility of the soil is exhausted the settler must either turn to other branches of farming, or move on to regions of as yet unexhausted fertility. There are parts of the world where the soil is of such permanent richness that, even continuous wheat cropping will not exhaust it. Such are the alluvial plains of Hungary and the black lands of Southern Russia. Where such soil exists, under a suitable climate, its value to the world is universally recognized. In all the progress of wheat culture in the United States or Canada, no such land was found until the Red River of the north was reached, and there beyond what was supposed not very long ago to be the extreme limit of profitable agriculture of any kind has been found not only a climate suitable to the production of wheat but an inexhaustible soil; a combination of soil and climate that has given the world its wheat of highest grade. This is not a raw, it is an old story, established by experience extending over thirty years. The great flour mills of Minneapolis, the financial and railroad centre of St. Paul, and the great lake port of Duluth are all the beneficiaries of the product of the Red River Valley which thirty years ago was an unknown and uninhabited waste. To-day the condition of the wheat crop in the Red River Valley is a matter of the deepest interest in all the commercial, financial and transportation centres of the world, and because of the especially favorable conditions of soil and climate will be so for generations to come.

But now that part of the Red River Valley which lies within the United States is fully occupied. Pioneer conditions have been succeeded by all the advantages of a high civilization. The soil is as rich as ever and the grade of wheat is still No. 1 hard, the standard of the world. Under those conditions the price of land is high, and so the very first and most essential condition which attracts the pioneer, cheap land—no longer exists in the Red River Valley. If the flowing tide of population, the increase of many millions of people, is not to be thrown back upon itself to congest in the great cities or degenerate on sub-divided and worn out farms the overflow of the most industrious and ambitious people on earth—of Canada and the United States—must, and still further on a suitable field and elbow room for their life and labor, their energy and enterprise, preferably in producing the world's greatest need, more wheat. The international boundary, the 49th parallel, is merely an imaginary line, and it is worth while enquiring how far beyond that line the great wheat area, of which the United States' portion of the Red River Valley is a part, extends.

The usual similarity of soil and general conditions throughout the drainage basin of any river, or river system, is an accepted fact. The Red River of the north is not an isolated stream but a part of a great river system having the most remarkable similarity of soil, irrespective of considerable variations of climate, throughout its extent. It would be unprofitable to here go into a detailed description of the geography and geology of this region. There are, however, two great mountain divisions of the northern part of the continent. The wooded, rocky, low lying Laurentian formation or range which starts from the Atlantic coast, on the great river which gives it its name, skirts the Canadian lakes and stretches away northwesterly, a region of lake, rock and forest, until it meets the Rockies near the Arctic coast. The Rockies lie comparatively near to the Pacific coast, for the whole length of the continent. Their elevation is great and the country slopes from their base easterly to the valley of the Mississippi in the southern part, but in the northern part on the Canada side it slopes northerly as well as easterly until it strikes the barriers of the low lying but impenetrable Laurentian range. There is thus a great triangular area of fertile soil lying between the Rockies on the west and the Laurentian range on the east and north. This area or its whole length from east to west and for a width of some four hundred miles from south to north is occupied by the drainage basins of the Red River and of the Saskatchewan, both of which empty into Lake Winnipeg and form part of the same river system, having the same general geological characteristics, and the same inexhaustible wheat soil. The wheat area of the Red River Valley within the United States is possibly two hundred miles in length from north to south but on the Canada side the same advantages of soil with greater advantages of situation and climate extend northwesterly along the North Saskatchewan, to the Rockies a full thousand miles, with an average width of not less than two hundred miles. As already said, throughout this vast extent there are variations of climate and other conditions but the one distinguishing feature of the whole country is the deep black, wheat soil, a soil which will stand successive crops of wheat as no other soil in America will.

In case there may be doubts of the climatic or other advantages of that part of the Red River Valley on the Canada side, because of its more northerly situation it need only be said that the development in the province of Manitoba and the adjoining portions of the Northwest Territories is fully equal to that which has taken place in the United States. The city of Winnipeg, the lake ports of Port Williams and Port Arthur, the two lines of railway to these ports, the network of railways throughout the province, and the huge yield of wheat for the past several years, unequalled per head of population elsewhere; in the world all tell their story of created wealth which can only rest on a foundation of most favorable conditions. Indeed so favorable are the conditions and so satisfactory have been the results that the lands of the Red River Valley on the Canada side are either actually occupied or held at such prices as to suggest to the pioneer the desirability of going further west into the Saskatchewan valley to get as good soil more favorable natural conditions, and cheaper land, while still within the "Great Wheat Belt" of Canada, and of North America.

A farewell party was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McLeod, on Tuesday evening last, and was much enjoyed by the numerous friends and acquaintances who were gathered to bid a most hearty farewell to their well esteemed and highly respected friends. FIRE IN STRATHCONA.

Plainsdealer, Feb. 27.

A small but very destructive fire occurred in the west end of Strathcona last Tuesday morning by which H. Alanson and M. Schmaus are each the loser of a team of horses and a set of double harness. It appears that a boy had been in the stable with a lantern attending to the horses. He left the lantern burning when he went to breakfast. The supposition is that the lantern was knocked over in some way and set fire to the straw. The stable was a log building with a straw roof and burned like a matchwood. Before the fire was discovered it was too late to save the horses and in a few minutes destruction was complete.

PARTRIDGE HILL.

Feb. 24, 1903.

The home of Mr. John Wallis was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday, Feb. 18th, when the eldest daughter, Miss Lillian E. was united in the bonds of matrimony to Mr. John Calhoun, Edmonton, Rev. G. G. Easton, Fort Saskatchewan, officiating. The bride looked charming, dressed in white satin, with a white veil and wreath, white kid gloves and slippers, and carried an ivory backed prayer book. She was assisted by her sister, Miss Laura, who wore white chamois trimmed with lace and ribbon, white gloves and slippers and white roses in her hair. The groom was supported by Mr. Parlow, of Edmonton. After the ceremony was performed the guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast at the conclusion of which the health of the bride and groom was proposed and heartily responded to. The presents were numerous and costly, both from Partridge Hill friends and those in Edmonton and other places, testifying to the high esteem in which the bride was held, not only at home but everywhere where she was known. The wedding profession loses one of its most enthusiastic and successful followers when Partridge Hill young people will miss Miss Wallis very much from their social circle. Amid showers of rice the happy couple drove away to their home in Edmonton and their many friends with them, many years of wedded bliss.

The "Corner Class" special held at Mr. John M. Alton's on the evening of 20th, was a decided success. The crowd being so great interfered with the playing of games as had been intended, but a longer programme was given. The choruses, instrumental solos, voice recitations and gramophone selections were all good. Rev. G. G. Easton was elected chairman, and demonstrated his ability to fill the position; nor during the entire evening he kept the audience in good humor, and well merited the hearty vote of thanks tendered him at the conclusion of the entertainment. A true to life "comedy" was given in first class style by the Misses Pearce. The comedy was "Gossip." Rev. A. Forbes in speaking of it directly after informed the audience that those young ladies did not for a moment suppose this assembly would be entertained by listening to "gossip" but the object of the dialogue was to act as a "looking glass" in which those who indulged in such a practice might see themselves as others see them. Rev. Aldridge was also present and as usual had some good thoughts to express and expressed them in his usual happy manner. Professor Jones and Mr. Truman Clatterham, were present and acted as accompanists to the different singers, besides favoring the audience with some instrumental solos which were highly appreciated by lovers of good music. Friends from Edmonton, the Fort, Agriola and Lacey were present, and all expressed themselves as well pleased with the entertainment furnished by those young ladies. A pleasing feature of the evening was a presentation of a handsome bible and an address by the class to their teacher, Mrs. E. J. Torrie. The presentation was made by Miss M. Gordon and the address read by Miss M. Wallis. Mrs. Torrie replied thanking the girls on the beautiful present and for the kindly feeling which prompted it.

EGG LAKE.

Feb. 25, 1903.

Freighters who have taken contracts for Athabasca Landing, on the north shore are beginning to think it about time to move things a little more rapidly. Seven loads of freight passed up on Tuesday afternoon, and there is a great deal yet to haul. Some of the contractors, who have also lumber and wood contracts, may find out if this weather continues, that they have "bitten off more than they can chew."

Mr. and Mrs. Edgson, and Miss Edgson, arrived on Friday, the 20th, from Sault Ste. Marie. All their stock, household effects, etc., preceded them twenty miles north of Egg Lake several weeks ago. The local Edgson boys have been on their homesteads since last summer, and as new settlers are moving in there all the time, Egg Lake will soon be half way to one of the best settlements in Northern Alberta. Last guide Bolster has just returned to town with a party of six home seekers, and from what we have seen all the others do, we are pretty sure they will soon be back with their "goods and chattels."

Our new assessment roll, (not yet revised) shows that ten quarter sections of C. P. R. land have been bought in Egg Lake school district during the past year. Another year like that would dispose of the majority of the C. P. R. land tax grievances, as far as we are concerned for the future at least. (The past is dead, but not forgot, says the poet.) However, as there are still three sections, right in the centre of the district, which the company refuses to sell, for reasons best known to itself, judgment against the C. P. R. in the case which we believe is being brought to court, would be very satisfactory to the people of Egg Lake.

February has been a very favorable month for school. The attendance in Egg Lake school during this month notwithstanding the fact that several pupils did not come in till after the first week was over.

Peter Ward, who has been ailing since last fall, is not expected to live.

EXTENSION OF STRATHCONA.

The following notice appears in the Northwest Territories Gazette, of Feb. 14th.

Public notice is hereby given that the corporation of the town of Strathcona will apply to the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories at its next session for an amendment of chapter 28 of the Ordinances of 1899, intitled "An Ordinance to incorporate the Town of Strathcona," so as to include within the boundaries of the said town of Strathcona, the following lands: River lots seven, nine, eleven, thirteen, fifteen, fifteen A, seventeen, and the most northerly sixty-eight acres of river lot nineteen of the Edmonton Settlement, also those portions of the south half of section twenty-nine and the north half of section twenty in township fifty-two, range twenty-four, west of the fourth meridian, lying to the east of the Calgary and Edmonton trail, also the fractional north west quarter of section twenty-one and the fractional south half of section twenty-eight in township fifty-two, range twenty-four, west of the fourth meridian.

Dated at Strathcona, this 9th day of January, 1903.
P. C. JAMIESON,
Advocate for the Town of Strathcona.

MILLET.

Feb. 27.

The fine weather is quite an advantage to new settlers seeking for good locations.

We are looking anxiously forward for the new station to be built and an operator to arrive, so we can tell if the train is on time, or if it is five minutes or six hours late. Farmers coming some distance for their mail, do not approve very much of the uncertainty, as the busy time will soon be here and their time will be valuable.

The city blacksmith is very busy these days getting machinery ready for spring work, such as fixing plows, and straightening out the kinks in harrows, etc.

F. Blad, general merchant and post master, reports business very brisk.

The Millet boys play their first football match this evening. The Shamrock is the name of the town team, and the country boys will be the opponents, and a hot time is expected.

We would not like to tell Mr. F. Oliver that he is showing partiality, but if he can favor Ladue and Wetaskiwin with a visit and lecture, why not the same with Millet? We have a good school house that would afford suitable room. However, we have no lost faith yet, but hope to see Mr. Oliver in Millet before he departs for the east.
